Morse Midi is a small app that converts text written in Morse code to MIDI file format. The program comes archived in a ZIP file and is portable. It can be carried around on USB flash drives to be later fired up in any available computer. Morse code is probably the most basic form of non-lingual sound-based form of transmitting messages. It has been used across the history as the most effective way of relaying information when other methods were prohibited. Knocking two things together or controlling any sort of impulse energy source, be it sound or visual, could generate a Morse code and a message could be transmitted. Simple and effective interface The program consists of a main panel where the text-to-Morse code is to be introduced, and it also arrives with a small number of controls in the upper part of the application. It's intuitive so you won't spend a lot of time decoding it. Straightforward features All users have to do is introduce a text message in the main panel and hit play. The program will immediately translate each letter into its Morse code equivalent and play their afferent MIDI notes. However, Morse Midi also comes with some extra functionalities, like allowing users to import their own text files and generating random or customized text. The latter can also be set to have limited numbers and characters, with various punctuation modes being also accepted. In case curious users are planning to learn the Morse code in any way, the application also comes with a cipher table that helps people understand quickly what are the symbols for punctuation, digits, and letters. Conclusion Morse Midi is a useful tool for those that need to relay Morse messages in times of need. Words can be written in the main interface, and then a conversion of that text in MIDI format can be saved to be later stored or sent to those that can decipher it. Put your favorite words in the textbox and then choose the style you want to use. For instance, I selected "Short - Short to Accent", which made the letters to be shorter and the style to be sharper, but remember that it also makes them a bit harder to read. In addition, you can also use other styles, including Short - Long to Accent. The program will generate a list of words with those styles as the default ones. Music styles are also supported with up to five options, including a 7-note tune, a 3-note tune, and others. I also chose to use a 3-note tune with the same number of melodies. Then, simply hit the "Generate" button, and within a few seconds the program will create the MIDI files for you. The value of comparative histopathology in staging oral squamous cell carcinomas. Clinicopathologic staging of oral squamous cell carcinomas is crucial for an accurate assessment of prognosis and management. The objective of this study was to evaluate the value of histopathology compared with clinical staging and to determine whether histopathologic factors influence overall survival. The files of 130 consecutive patients treated for squamous cell carcinoma of the oral cavity at the Royal North Shore Hospital (Sydney, Australia) during the period from October 1, 1996, to September 30, 2003, were reviewed. Demographic and clinical information were obtained from the hospital records and were combined with the histopathologic features to determine the clinical and histologic staging of each case. The histopathologic features were correlated with the overall survival of the patients. Fifty-four percent of the cases were stage I, 33% were stage II, and 13% were stage III at clinical staging. Forty-four percent of the cases were T1, 30% were T2, and 26% were T3 at histopathologic staging. The 5-year survival rate was 72% for T1, 60% for T2, and 43% for T3 at histopathologic staging. The overall 5-year survival rate was 69% for cases that were histopathologically stage I, 54% for stage II, and 48% for stage III. Comparative histopathologic staging of oral squamous cell carcinomas is comparable to clinical staging. In addition, the histopathologic features were identified as independent factors for prediction of overall survival.
